PROFESSOR E. D. ADRIAN, M.D., F.R.C.P., F.R.S.

Chairman of Committee appointed by the Medical Research Council, in consultation with the Board of Control, to advise and assist it in the promotion of research into mental disorders.

British Medical Journal, April 14, 1934, p. 679.

"Of all forms of casualty, this is one of the most pitiable; and if a host of useless neurotic wrecks as an aftermath of the present conflict is to be avoided, the situation must be dealt with on a severely practical basis - that is to say, by the enrolment of a contingent of psychologists experienced in the treatment of this group of "shock-neuroses". The problem cannot be treated as a mere side-line of orthodox medicine (with which, indeed, it has nothing whatever to do), and it is urgently submitted that such a panel be enlisted from psychologists so qualified. The selection should not be confined to members of the medical profession, who would thus be released for service where most needed, that is to say, in dealing with casualties resulting from wounds and disease".
